

Celatid

Celatid Wiki entry

This life-form has the mysterious natural ability to float through the air. It appears to detect human  brain waves and will move towards a human target even if well hidden. Once a target is detected the Celatid lands and fires small globules of extremely corrosive venom. It accompanies the Muton race in its wanderings.

Medium Threat - Terror Unit

The Celatid is one of the two Terror Unit types deployed with Mutons, and will only be seen accompanying them. It resembles a large, pink kidney bean that hovers along slowly at ground level. It attacks by spitting venom at its target, and can do so with great accuracy. This venom is extremely dangerous to unarmoured units, while somewhat less threatening to armoured troops and HWP's. It can only project its venom over a short range (perhaps 7 squares), and has relatively low mobility. It has negligible armor and can be destroyed with standard weapon fire, or glancing fire from heavier weapons.

The science division says that a celatid is capable of tracking units outside of its line of sight, but there is no field evidence to confirm this. In any case, it is at home in close quarters, particularly indoors where it can pop out from around corners, and its small size can make it a somewhat difficult target to hit. However, its low mobility, short attack range and vulnerability to fire means that, with proper care taken, it is only a moderate threat on the battlefield.