

The Rain Man

By Basil (original post)

A fellow in his early 30's rather ordinary looking. It's just that every time he goes out the hotel's doors, he get hit with water. It can be a suddenly-broken hydrant, a splashed puddle, kids playing with water pistols, — whatever. He'll get wet. Maybe a sprinkle, maybe a drenching. It always happens.

Unless it's already raining; in that case, the rain stops until he's no longer visible from the hotel's front windows. Then the rain starts back up.

He doesn't seem to care if he gets wet, and if the “coincidence” is pointed out to him, he'll seem surprised but uninterested.

BTW, if it's snowing when he goes out the door, the snow suddenly turns to rain. Ditto hail/sleet.
